Body Language

Do you ever wonder how animals communicate to humans? It is my belief they use body language with their eyes, ears, and sounds.

Animals eyes can tell a lot about their feelings. The animal's eyes could be closed then maybe they're tired or relaxed. If the eyes are sagging or they're dull, they are possibly depressed. Possibly, it's eyes are wide open or watering they're likely scared. Maybe the eyes are wide open and wagging their tail or jumping they're probably happy.

Animal's ears are another part of expressing feelings. The ears could be down gently they're probably calm. Possibly its ears are drooping they're upset. Maybe their ears are tightly shut to it's head they could be scared. Some animals ears are perked up they're excited.

The noises from animals give us a lot of information about how their feeling. If they're snoring they could possibly be exhausted. Possibly the animals whimpering they are likely upset or scared. Maybe their yipping the animals overjoyed.

In conclusion, animals talk to people based on their eyes, ears, and sounds. So the next time you examine an animal consider observing their body language to tell how they are feeling.
