Natalie Reddick

5th Grade - 2nd Place

Mary Moore Elementary

Teacher: Amanda Vu

No Abandonment

If I could make one good law about all animals that everyone had to follow it would definitely be no abandonment. The reason I would choose this rule is because abandonment is awful and rude for any animal. If you wonder why I say that, animals aren't heartless, bad, feelingless animals. They understand sadly that if you abandon them for some reason, you didn't like them. In fact animals abandoned would probably spend the rest of their sad lifetimes at a dump trying to get a good meal thinking, "That owner didn't like me. Why? And what did I do wrong?" Animals abandoned also might give off a hurtful illness to things that come near it. And they could pass at the dump from being bitten by a creepy rat, have eaten something bad for its health, and much more sad reasons. In fact have you ever seen an animal that looks skinny, hopeless, and sad? In fact, they look like they regret their awful life. That's what animals look like when they've been abandoned. You wouldn't want your cute pet to look like that, would you? Sad, hungry, comfortless, thirsty, and maybe even hopeless. Sure they are a lot of work to deal with, but you should deal with it rather than give them a hungry, hopeless, comfortless life. In fact, if I could make a good law about no abandonment for animals. And if someone broke that law, they would go to jail for a boring year to have a good think about what they did. But if they've done it multiple times, they would go to jail for 4 boring years to have a real good think. And that is just because I'm nice and kind. After all they should go to jail for about the same amount of time that one of the sad animals they abandoned, were abandoned. All animals deserve a nice, cozy, warm place to live, with plenty of food, water, comfort, and shelter. No living animal should ever get abandoned. That is why if f could make one rule everyone had to follow, it would be no abandonment for living animals.